Brigham in the Pulpit—A Mosaic of Charity and Cruelty.

A somewhat remarkable, and evidently carefully prepared and matured sermon of Brigham Young, as delivered at the Tabernacle on Sunday, December 23d, ult., appears in full in the last Deseret News. We confess to a regret that our limited space does not permit us to print it entire, in common with our contemporaries. Not that we can yield our unqualified admiration to its tone and matter, but that it exemplifies in a peculiar manner, the character of the teachings of the acknowledged head, not only of the Church, but of the people of Utah. The first half of the sermon abounds in much that is praiseworthy, and seems to betoken the meekness, devoutness, long suffering, and charity of a Christian man of God. So patient and humble does Brigham appear in the first two columns of his discourse, that one in reading it comes to the conclusion that hardly would "butter melt in his mouth."

The last half, on the other hand, exposes the bitterness which is rankling in his heart, and a vindictiveness which proposes to itself no bounds.

We quote briefly from the first part of the sermon, wherein Brigham almost sheds tears over the wickedness of the world, and feigns to cast the broad mantel of his Christian-like charity over the sins of his enemies. He says:

Whoever lives a few years more will see suffering among the wicked until their hearts sicken. If I have one wish which is greater than another, it is, if I had the power, to make man do right; to make them stop their swearing, their lying, their deceiving, to stop trying to injure the innocent, and begin to be honest and upright in all their dealings with one another and honor the name of the Deity. This is the worst wish I have ever had in my heart about my fellow beings. The great object of my life is to establish the kingdom of God upon the earth.

When we got that far in our perusal of Brother Brigham's remarks, we paused and inwardly exclaimed that that sounded very nice and decidedly orthodox. Our mind wandered back to the shores of Tiberias, and to that Mount near Capernaum, nineteen centuries ago, when the multitude were charged to "love your enemies, do good to them that hate, and pray for them that despitefully use and persecute you."

True, we could not help recollecting divers and sundry passages from the sermons heretofore published in the Church organ, on the rather uncharitable doctrine of "blood atonement," and "cutting off just below the ears," and "sending to —— across lots," and our mind would wander to certain pages of not remote history exemplifying those peculiar doctrines taught and upheld in the Tabernacle. But we were about banishing all these remembrances by quoting to ourselves that consolatory hymn, commencing "while the lamp holds out to burn," &c., when our eyes caught the last half of the sermon above quoted from. Brigham evidently expended all his milk of human kindness and christian charity in the first half of his discourse. He comes down to his work manfully when he essays to speak of the Church militant, and to talk "politically and financially" as he terms it. With a facility of a very harlequin, he drops his robes of sanctity and charity and meekness, and launches forth his diatribes against the presumed enemies of Zion.

The "ward" of the Gentile merchants attracts his attention and leads him away from his Heavenly thoughts. The immortality puts on mortality, the incorruptibility corruption, and the angelic something of the demoniac. He descends by the run from his Mount of Beatitudes and takes his position even below the level of ordinary poor humanity. If we should say that in this sermon Brigham exhibited unseemly anger and vindictiveness, the penny trumpets would squeak out "misrepresentation." If we should add that Brigham in this sermon justified and threatened assassination, it would be boldly and unblushingly characterized as "slander." So we propose to quote him literally, as officially reported in both the Church and lay organs of Mr. Young. And here we may say, that reliable gentlemen who heard this sermon delivered have informed us that before printing it has been considerably toned down, and many of the rough corners smoothed away.

In yesterday's Daily Telegraph you will see a card addressed to the authorities of the Church, and you will also see my answer to it. There is a class of men who are here to pick the pockets of the Latter-day Saints, and then use the means they get from us to bring about our destruction. They want my houses, and your houses, and the privilege of defiling our beds; and if there is anything said or done about it, lying dispatches are sent to the General Government to get an army sent out here as quickly as possible, for "O dear, we are in danger, and need protection!" What are you in danger of? You have not the privilege of driving a stake on any lot of land you want for the purpose of claiming it, when it has been owned and improved for years. There is a lot opposite the theatre that I took the fence off and rented to the City Council for a hay market. A man whom I now see in this congregation suggested its occupancy; said he "why does not somebody go and sleep on it, and survey it in the morning and claim it." If anybody had done so, undoubtedly he would have got a pre-emption right that would have lasted him as long as he would have wanted it.

Let us suppose for a moment that some thoughtless, or reckless, or even careful and honest man had taken possession of the ra[nch] [Brig]ham referred to, and which he claims as his, not by virtue of any improve[ments] [made] thereon or any compliance with [the] [laws] which Government requires of [those] [who] settle upon the public domain, the ser[vices] [which] he may have rendered have been his

A statement of the public debt shows a total of $2,675,062,525; amount in the Treasury, $131,737,332; decrease, $10,000,000.

Washington, January 5.

The Senate not in session.

House—Spaulding, of Ohio, argued for the admission of the Southern States upon ratification of the Constitution Amendment, which, he said, was the understanding heretofore. He warned Congress against the impeachment of the President.

Mr. Stevens replied, characterizing Spaulding's speech pernicious.

Washington, January 4.

Mr. Maynard asked leave to offer a resolution instructing the Ways and Means Committee to inquire into the expediency of redeeming compound interest Treasury notes and redeeming 5-20 bonds with Treasury notes bearing interest at not less than three nor more than five per cent.

Mr. Eldridge objected.

Mr. Bundy introduced a joint resolution for establishing four territorial governments for the so-called State of Texas. Read twice and referred.

The first business in order was the consideration of the bill reported by Mr. Stevens on the 30th of April, from the Joint Select Committee on reconstruction, which provides for the States lately in rebellion full political rights. The question being on a substitute proposed therefor by Stevens on the 19th of December, 1866, Mr. Bingham made it a point of order that as the eighth section provided for the admission of rebel States, in compliance with the conditions prescribed, must be referred to the Committee on Reconstruction.

The Speaker overruled the point of order, as that bill had been reported from the committee and was now before the House and subject to amendment.

Mr. Stevens supported the substitues, and said the late decision of the Supreme Court rendered action unnecessary. It had taken away the protection of loyal men, black and white, and had unsheathed the assassin's dagger. If the true loyal people of the South were in terrible peril, this bill enabled loyal men to form a government to protect themselves. One of the most atrocious murderers ever let loose, had been liberated under this decision. Congress must courageously provide for such cases. In speaking of the President, he said that although he was Commandar-in-Chief of the army Congress was his commander, and please God he should be made to obey. The President, he said, should know that this was a government of the people and that Congress was the people, and unless impartial suffrage was introduced in the rebel States every one of them would be sure to send a solid rebel representative and cast a solid rebel electoral vote. They, with their kindred Copperheads of the North, would always elect a President and control Congress and the people.

Mr. Stevens modified the third section.

Mr. Ashley moved that the amendment be ordered printed.

It declares the acts of the so-called State governments void, and makes all males over twenty-one years electors. It also imposes an oath declaring that the person was, on the 4th of March, 1864, willing to comply with the requirements of the President's proclamation of December 8th, 1863, and was at all times thereafter opposed to the continuance of the rebellion, and never treated Federal prisoners otherwise than as lawful prisoners of war, and will hereafter be faithful to the United States Government. It imposes upon delegates elected to State conventions an additional oath that they have never voluntarily borne arms against the United States, and had never held any office, civil or military, under the Confederate government.

If the Convention agrees to adopt the Constitutional Amendment, it is then to select five citizens, distinguished for their loyalty and fidelity to the Constitution and Union, who are to act as a provisional committee of public safety for the State until a constitutional State convention shall assemble and elect a provisional Governor. It shall adopt an ordinance for making all persons free and equal before the law; free schools; repudiating debts incurred for the rebellion, and excluding from office rebels who held revolutionary appointments. Martial law may be declred by the provisional Governor and habeas corpus suspended.

Mr. Pike said there were three plans; first, the President's policy; second, the let alone policy, and third, the superceding policy, establishing loyal governments. The first had been condemned by the people: the second plan might work if the States would act, but they had refused. He would admit each State when they did justice to all. He would not wait for decisions of the Supreme Court, which are proverbially unfortunate.

Mr. Bingham moved to recommit.

The House went into Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Kenny reviewed the Secretary of the Treasury's report on finances and favoring the repeal of the five per cent. tax on manufacturs, and opposing the idea that our debts should be paid by this generation, creating, as he styled the report, a budget of absurdities. Already large importations were threatening business men with bankruptcy. England had not attempted to pay her debt, but promoted her industry instead. He was sarcastic on the remark of the Secretary that the debt should not remain as a reminder to the Southern people of humiliation and defeat. He condemned the suggestion for the reduction of currency, as a rapid contraction might bankrupt us all.

Mr. Holmes followed on the relations of the late rebel States, asking Congress to annul the existing State governments.

Mr. Lawrence presented a bill prescribing qualification of officers and attorneys.

Mr. Payne introduced a bill to organize, arm and discipline militia. It provides that all able bodied male persons who shall have been born or naturalized in the United States, or shall have declared their intention to become citizens, or shall have actually voted at any State or Territorial election, between the ages of eighteen and forty, shall be enlisted in the militia. The national guard of the United States shall consist of two regiments

Estimates for the construction of the Northern Pacific Railroad were sent to the Senate to-day. The Quartermaster General estimated that transportation would be required by the War Department for 15,000 men and 15,330,000 pounds of military stores; having calculated upon the supply of fifteen military posts, each manned with 140 foot and 75 mounted men, ten of them from the eastern terminus and five from the western. The estimates of cost of the road were prepared by Brevet Brigadier General Simpson, which are as follows: For construction of road, $1,491,886.65; for rolling stock and fixture, $11,200 per mile, $22,899,486; for steamers on the Missouri and Columbia rivers, $300,000; for engineering and contingencies, $100,000; for tunnelling, beyond estimated average, per mile, $11,078,398. These and other items named, make a total of $206,600,340, or an average per mile of $10,140.

The brig A. Horta, from the West Indies, of and for Boston, with a cargo of salt, went ashore in a gale on the 27th ult., on the south side of the island of Nashawina, in Buzzard Bay, and broke in two. The captain and a colored seaman succeeded in getting ashore, but the rest of the crew, seven in number, were drowned. Four bodies had been recovered and buried on the Island. The spars and rigging drifted ashore, but the remainder of the vessel went to pieces.

Louisville, January 3.

A fire broke out to night in the furnishing store of W. W. Morris. The loss by fire and water is estimated at $18,000; fully covered by insurance.

The Times says England's only difficulty with the foreign powers is her relation with the United States, and urges a prompt settlement of these on a satisfactory basis. The Times believes if the Eastern question can now be approached in proper spirit, it can be brought to a speedy settlement by the European powers.

New York, January 4.

The Times, of this morning, says: At the private party of the yachtmen on New Year's Eve, bets on the great yacht race were settled to the amount of $195,000. In some instances odds had been given on the Henrietta; in others odds were held on the field against her.

New York, January 5.

Quite an explosion has been produced in the Fenian ranks by the discovery that James Stephens never left New York, but remained here hid, and has even deserted the Fenian ranks. This fact was officially announced in a convention of Fenian Centers last evening, which elected General Gleeson to fill the vacancy, and voted to continue [illegible] Stephens justifies his action [illegible] that the organization is not powerful enough to attempt Ireland's liberation. Colonel Riley stated to the meeting that he was not a believer in Stephens to be a traitor, but attributed his conduct to cowardice.

Philadelphia, January 6.

—A meeting of the common woolen manufacturers was held on Saturday, and adopted a memorial to Congress asking a modification of the revenue laws, the removal of the 5 per cent. tax on goods, a drawback of 3 per cent. per pound on cotton to be refunded manufacturer, and also a drawback on all articles taxed previous to entering.

The Senate yesterday passed the Constitutional Amendment by a vote of 35 to 8.

New York, January 6.

Thomas M. Burke assassinated Mrs. Fanny Willard, in this city, yesterday, and subsequently placed a revolver to his own head and fired. He was taken to the hospital and died. It appears that Burke had been following his victim with proposals of marriage, and becoming furious by jealousy, determined to end her life and his own.

Richmond, Va., January 3.

A contract has been awarded for a railway from Pensacola, to be completed in May.

The schooner Pauline, from New Orleans for Pensacola, was recently fired at from Fort Morgan for neglecting to show her colors. She was badly injured, the shot taking effect just at the water line.

Washington, January 3.

Senate—The Chair laid on the table a communication form the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a bill and report of Commissioner Wells; referred to the Finance Committee.

Mr. Morgan presented a remonstrance of the New York merchants against any change of the duty on sugar, linseed oil and steel; referred.

Mr. Sumner introduced a resolution directing the Judiciary Committee to inquire if legislation on the Constitutional Amendment is necessary to prevent the sale of persons into slavery for any term of years, as the punishment of crime called his attention to cases which had come under his observation in which colored persons had been sold by order of the courts in Maryland. It seemed to him that Congress should have the opinion of the Judiciary Committee as to the right of States to inflict such punishment.

Mr. Saulsbury said the advertisements referred to by Sumner, were copies of what frequently appeared in a Massachusetts paper some years ago. The Legislature of Maryland had not been in session since the passage of the Civil Rights bill, and had, therefore, not had the opportunity to change its views of State.

Mr. Johnson said he had no objections in reference to a resolution of Sumner's, and supposed it would be accomplished more speedily by the courts. The Judge who ordered the sale referred to, had been arrested under the Civil Rights bill, and the case would soon be tried and probably carried to the Supreme Court. He believed there was no State in the Union more opposed to slavery on account of color than Maryland.

Mr. Fessenden asked if the law under which criminals were sold in Maryland applied to white men also.

Mr. Cresswell said it did not.

Mr. Johnson said if there was any difference in punishment between white and blacks it would be settled under the Civil Rights bill.

Mr. Cresswell said the amendment abolishing slavery covered the whole case. The words, "except as punishment for crime," never meant to give right to sell criminals into slavery. The proper enforcement of the amendment would abolish all sales of persons. He should not agitate with his colleague as to the eradication of the spirit of slavery from the statute of Maryland. Perhaps Mr. Johnson was right that it could be ascertained what the Legislature—just convened—would do to abolish the black laws of which the sales referred to were but the spirit.

Mr. Sumner resumed the floor and spoke in favor of this resolution, which was then adopted.

Mr. Sherman presented the memorial of General Grant and other officers, asking that, in addition to their present pay, retired officers be allowed longevity rations; referred.

Mr. Sherman also presented a petition against the increased duty on railroad iron; referred.

Mr. Crogan introduced a bill in relation to the appointment of a register of wills and a register of deeds for the District of Columbia.

Mr. Sumner presented a resolution instructing to Judiciary Committee to inquire if any further legislation is necessary to prevent the enslavement of Indians, or any system. Peonage in the Territory of New Mexico was greater than Senators were aware of. He read from a report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs concerning the treatment of the captive Indians. In support of his resolution, from this report, he said, that officers of the United States army held captured Indians in a state of peonage, and it was to this he directed attention.

Mr. Conness said the administration of military affairs in New Mexico had been a shame and disgrace for years; he had made efforts for a reformation without avail; he had evidence in his possession that the officer who was referred to by Sumner, was personally interested in leasing—letting to Government—houses occupied by the army; inquiry by the Military Committee, adopted.

New York, January 7.

The Herald's Washington special says the message of the President vetoing the District suffrage bill will be sent in to-morrow. It is an elaborate studied document, dignified in language, free from passion, firm, argues on the relation existing between the Legislature and the people, says the bill contravenes the Constitution, and says Congress is bound to respect the wishes of the people; affected by legislation it further shows that the bill confers greater privileges to niggers in the District than accorded them by any State North or South. The message was read at the Cabinet meeting and approved by all the members except Stanton. General Grant was present by invitation, and unqualifiedly approved of the message.

New York, January 7.

The Constitutional Amendment was rejected by the South Carolina Legislature.

A Richmond correspondent accuses Judge Underwood of preferring charges of treason against Mr. McVeigh, a persistent Unionist through the war, to prevent his contesting for confiscated property purchased by Underwood.

The Tribune's special says Stephens has retired altogether from the Fenian ranks, alleging that the organization was too weak to attempt a conflict with England.

The centres held a meeting last night to consider the action necessary to the statement made. Stephens has received $120,000 since his arrival in this country, but little remains in the Treasury; also, none of the arms of the present organization were sent to Ireland. A directory will be appointed at the next meeting. No doubt Stephens is still in the city.
